

EDITORIAL

The first issue of the Ghana Bulletin of Theology (New Series) was greeted in several circles with great satisfaction and optimistic look into the future regarding its sustainability. Indeed such optimism was even more held by the GBT's determined editorial team. However, due to some unforeseen challenging circumstances we have been unable to put on the shelves what was supposed to have been volume 1, number 2 (December, 2006) until now. But maintaining the original numbering of the series will leave the journal two series back in default. That is why this issue is numbered VOLUME 2, (JULY 2007). The said 'challenging circumstances' have not completely gone away, though we are firmly in control and hope to continue to ensure the uninterrupted publication of the journal from now on.

GBT Volume 3, 2(July 2008) will be dedicated to the commemoration of the Golden Jubilee anniversary of Ghana's independence. We welcome articles that focus on the social, cultural, and political transformations that have taken place in Ghana during the last fifty years and how these connect with religion. Articles on the development of academic disciplines in the study of religions in Ghana are especially welcome.

We are grateful to the many people who in diverse ways helped to get this volume of the journal out eventually. Particularly we wish to thank the Uniting Protestant Churches in the Netherlands who funded the publication of this particular issue of the GBT.

We are especially happy as we have the privilege to dedicate this volume to Rev Canon Emeritus Professor J. S. Pobee who turned 70 this year. We wish him many more productive years.
