

Editorial

Dear Huria Journal readers, on behalf of the editorial Board I wish to introduce you to this 23rd Volume of Huria Journal of the Open University of Tanzania. This is the third volume of which the Editorial Board has managed to publish this year. Credit should go to Authors and Patrons who through their submission of manuscripts has shown trust in the Journal. Also credit should go the reviewers of submitted manuscripts and the hard working editorial board.

Huria Journal of the Open University of Tanzania aims to enhance and advance the publishing of high quality research and review articles in Open and Distance Learning, social sciences and humanities, life sciences, physical and biomedical sciences. Huria Journal is peer reviewed and is open to contributions from both national and international researchers.

This volume contains 12 interesting articles ranging from how the recycling of construction and demolition waste into building material could contribute to sustainable social, economic, and environmental improvements, the effect of temperature on marine flowering plants, the importance of environmental education to secondary school teachers. Moreover, the issue has articles related to Access to higher education in developing countries, rent seeking and corruption behavior in sub-Saharan countries, Student assessment in Open Distance Learning institution, political science and education issues.

Dear readers, I hope you will enjoy reading articles published in this volume and continue to contribute articles to this journal.

Prof. Emmanuel Kigadye
